Hope for Faithful Catholics During This Great Apostasy

We are cursed to live in interesting times; I don't know who said that or when, but I've heard the phrase and agree with the sentiment. But more than interesting is the unparalleled evil of our own days. Perhaps it's just worse now that we have a twenty-four-hour news cycle or because we're all locked indoors. Whatever the reason, the faith of many is being shaken. The three greatest evils of our time: global apostasy from the Catholic Faith, White genocide and liberal capitalism. All three of these have caused their own crisis, one of religion, identity and stability. The solution is not to lose hope, but to revel in the knowledge that despite the power of our enemies, God is in control. However, that does not absolve us of necessary action in the face of even overwhelming odds. We must rebuild our people, our Church and our nations. This will require patience, sacrifice and courage of a portion not unlike that of our ancestors. We are the inheritors of a divine people, who created a world unparalleled in its fairness, virtue and aspirational tendency. We literally reached the heavens. Now, we must reach down inside of ourselves and realize that we will either be the last generation of White Europeans, or the greatest. Or both. Pray and pray harder; have a family; master yourself; fight for your people; believe boldly and act boldly. The Catholic Church is always triumphant and so will our people be as well.
